Hypocrisy Kills Salmon

Editor:

Missing from the "cascading crises facing Pacific salmon" in "Witnessing the Collapse" (Aug. 5) is any mention of, dare I say it, logging.

Wholesale industrial logging of watersheds produces thick groves of young, thirsty trees that dry up drainages and deprive them of water-cooling riparian shading, decimating the fragile salmonid evolutionary cycle. After the loggers leave, wildfires thrive. Without healthy forests, the planet bakes and the oceans acidify, de-oxygenate, warm and rise as glaciers melt, reducing fresh water supply, killing fish and eliminating nature's carbon capture and sequestration capacity.

Salmon are central to watershed health, exiting coastal rivers weighing ounces and returning two to four years later fattened on a protein-rich diet that gets delivered to growing trees, vegetation and critters. Bears and others deposit the remains of nitrogen-rich, post-spawned salmon cuisine to upslope trees, whose nourished roots and canopies then retain sediment that would otherwise cloud the waters of visual feeding salmon, and bury their redds.

Salmon, and we, suffer from the hypocrisy of California Department of Fish and Wildlife's Chuck Bonham and the water boards' blaming the lack of state and federal laws rather than their cowardly refusal to implement and enforce such laws as the basin plans and endangered species regulations that are designed to protect native aquatic residents. Their powers to regulate logging and protect salmon and our thirsty watersheds are separate from those of the impotent and corrupt state Board of Forestry and Fire Protection.

But these so-called regulators shrink before the power of industrial logging, blame convenient scape-droughts and exacerbate the water shortages. Whatever happened to blaming the seals, Native Americans and Japanese fishermen?

If we don't acknowledge all that we understand about the drought, especially because some big bad actors will squawk, we deprive our solutions of effectiveness.

Humanizing Hesitancy

Editor:

My heart was warmed, and frustration pacified, while reading last week's NCJ. It seems there were a few attempts to humanize the hesitancy some members of our community feel about getting vaccinated (Mailbox, Aug. 19).

The snippet from the New York Times article provided useful tactics for reaching the unvaccinated, including a long-awaited sentence, "... using fear, shame, and shock have now been shown to not get us where we need to go ..."

Moving forward, I hope the NCJ can take such a stance into consideration when covering COVID. I have known more than a few vaccine hesitant Democrats that have been "pushed right" due to all of the misrepresentation, when so much of pop culture lumps all vaccine hesitant people into a group of selfish, uneducated Republicans. Counter productivity could find no better poster child.

The letter pleading for vaccination signed by so many of our local doctors was also well-played, and well-timed ("Please Get Vaccinated"). The simple, genuinely caring, human-to-human tone sets another great precedent for a productive approach to having a conversation with those on "the other side." I was a bit disappointed that they did not communicate the importance of eating healthy, getting exercise, fresh air and sunlight. They state they are "tired of the suffering, pain and death that can be avoided by getting vaccinated." Vaccination isn't enough. As a community concerned about health and safety it is up to each one of us to promote the use of every tool at our disposal to fight this thing. Along with healthy physical living and vaccination we need to take serious inventory of our informational diet and collective mental health. Stress and anxiety are immune suppressants, and we are in dire need of love as an inoculation against all psychological viruses of our time.

Arriving at Camp on a Speeder Car - Humboldt County, Circa 1900

Many logging camps were connected to the outside world only by railroad, such as this one from about 1900. To get there, you “either rode the rails or walked the rails.” The pump-action handcar was probably used by a repair crew. The females are probably taking a break from the cookhouse. The very basic cabins were used only as long as the crews were cutting near the camp.

‘Felt Severely’

The Delta-variant surge pushes local hospital capacity to the brink

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

Humboldt County’s ongoing record COVID-19 surge — which had seen 1,536 cases confirmed through the first 24 days of August as the Journal went to press — is putting an increasing strain on local hospitals, Health Officer Ian Hoffman told the Board of Supervisors.

“The hospital impact is being felt severely by our local healthcare workers,” Hoffman told the board during an Aug. 24 report, reading from a prepared statement, adding that while there’s some hope case rates have begun to plateau, hospitalizations have not. “Many critically ill residents have been transferred out of the county due to a lack of bed space in our local ICUs. Plans have been in the works for weeks at increasing staffing in the hospitals, but due to significant staffing shortages across the state and the U.S., so far, no increase in staffing has been secured as of the time of this report. Humboldt’s ICU capacity has been near or at 100 percent for most of the past two weeks.”

The large influx of COVID-19 patients that has seen at least 67 hospitalized this month, Hoffman said, has resulted in the cancellation of many procedures that are necessary but deemed “non emergencies,” but include things like heart, cancer and back surgeries, some of which had already been deferred due to COVID. Hoffman said he believes roughly 90 percent of the recent cases have been the highly contagious Delta variant.

Underscoring the reverberating impacts of the stretched hospital capacity, Fifth District Supervisor Steve Madrone asked if local hospitals are offering monoclonal antibody treatments, which some tests suggest have been effective in treating early COVID-19 patients who are mildly symptomatic but have underlying conditions putting them at great risk as a means of preventing more severe illness. Hoffman replied that the treatment requires an infusion that takes several hours, which requires space and staff time that are luxuries local hospitals currently don’t have amid the surge.

National, state and local officials, as well as a group of 111 local doctors in a recent letter to the community, have repeatedly advised that the three COVID-19 vaccines being used in the United States — including the Pfizer BioNTech vaccine the FDA gave full approval Aug. 23 — are safe and effective. While so-called breakthrough cases in fully vaccinated people are increasingly being seen with the rise of the Delta variant, data shows the vaccines remain incredibly effective at preventing severe illness, hospitalizations and death.

Yet as the Journal went to press Aug. 24, just 52 percent of the local population had been fully vaccinated. At the supervisors’ meeting Madrone urged those who have thus far chosen not to get vaccinated for whatever reason to take other precautions.

“If you want to be unvaccinated, stay home, if you can — or at least wear the mask,” he said.

Fourth District Supervisor and Board Chair Virginia Bass urged residents who had been so upset about last year’s lockdowns to recognize their actions now are impacting local businesses, noting that a single exposure or positive case can close a local business for more than a week.

“It’s impacting a lot of businesses very negatively right now,” she said, before turning her attention to the Humboldt County Fair, which chose to proceed even as most local events canceled, citing worsening COVID conditions. “Personally, I’m not going anywhere near the fair. I think that’s the worst idea. ... I think people are in such a hurry to resume life they’re forgetting there’s a bigger picture of how to approach it.”

Hoffman said he’s constantly hearing from business — including restaurants and daycare centers — that have had trouble staying open due to staff exposures or other related issues.

And the vast majority of Humboldt County’s school-age children are slated to return to in-person learning this week and next, as the county is in the midst of an unparalleled case surge. Through the first 24 days of August, it had confirmed a quarter of its total cases from the pandemic’s 19-month duration, as well as 20 percent of its hospitalizations and 14.5 percent of its deaths.

Hoffman indicated he’s worried about children’s ability to simply stay in school amid quarantine and isolation requirements and increasing threats of exposure to kids, staff and teachers, particularly in areas of the county with lower vaccination rates.

“These are very real concerns,” he said. ●

Do You Recall?

A quick primer on next month's election and how to cast your vote

By Byrhonda Lyons/CalMatters
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Gubernatorial recall efforts are common in California — every governor since 1960 has faced at least one — but have only proven successful once. Credit

To keep Gov. Gavin Newsom or not to keep Gov. Newsom? That is the question.

Upset by the progressive governor's policies, his handling of the pandemic and his infamous maskless dinner at the French Laundry, about 12 percent of the number of Californians who voted in the last election for governor signed petitions to force a recall election.

Newsom, who served as the mayor of San Francisco from 2004 through 2011 before becoming lieutenant governor in 2011, beat a wide swath of Democrat candidates in the 2018 primary before being elected governor with 62 percent of the vote over Republican candidate John Cox, who is once again seeking the office.

Newsom took office in 2019 with an approval rating of 43 percent, according to the Public Policy Institute of California (PPIC) and the number has since risen. In January of 2020, before the pandemic hit California, Newsom was polling at 49 percent, according to the PPIC, and his approval rating twice surpassed 60 percent after COVID-19 struck the state. In January of this year, the PPIC poll had 52 percent of California voters approving of the governor's job performance.

But recall efforts are commonplace, if unsuccessful, in California politics — with every governor in the state since 1960 facing at least one, but only the 2003 push to oust Gov. Gray Davis succeeded. Newsom himself faced five unsuccessful recall petition efforts before a sixth pushed by the California Patriot Coalition caught on amid pandemic lockdowns of schools and businesses in 2020, ultimately gathering the signatures of more than 1.7 million voters.

Now, on Sept. 14, registered voters will decide if the governor holds onto his job or not.

All active registered voters in California get their ballots in the mail about a month before the election.

The Newsom recall vote is a two-fer, asking voters:

- Should Newsom be removed?
- Who should replace him?

If you want Newsom to stay in office. If you want to remove Newsom, vote yes.

Either way, you can vote for a candidate on the second question, or skip it.

If more than half of voters opt to replace Newsom, whoever has the most votes among the replacement candidates will be sworn in as the new governor in late October — even if that person doesn't get a majority, and even if that person gets fewer votes than those cast for Newsom on Question No. 1.

You can write in a name, but it will be counted only if it's someone who filed by Aug. 31 to appear on the certified write-in list.

So who's running?

It's a long list of 46 people, including some Trump-supporting Republicans and a few Democrats who have never held elected office. There are also celebrities, professors, a rapper and a pastor. Here are the top candidates:

- Larry Elder, a Republican talk-show host from South Central Los Angeles
- John Cox, a Republican businessman who lost to Newsom in 2018
- Kevin Faulconer, the Republican former mayor of San Diego
- Kevin Kiley, Republican assemblymember from Rocklin
- Caitlyn Jenner, Republican, Olympian turned reality-television star
- Kevin Paffrath, a Democrat YouTube star and real estate broker and investor from Ventura

If Newsom were to be replaced, you could expect to vote again, soon. The regular election for governor is in 2022. Although theoretically, Democrats could begin the process to recall Newsom's replacement long before that.

As Shakespeare perhaps prophesied: Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more? ●

Fires to Humboldt's East Continue to Blaze

Heavy smoke largely blanketed the handful of fires burning to Humboldt County's east Aug. 23 and Aug. 24, reducing fire activity and aiding firefighting efforts. Crews reported progress — from increased containment to the implementation of community safety plans — on all four fires, to varying degrees.

A total of 3,654 people have been deployed from various agencies to work the fires, which now combine to span nearly 380,000 acres, bringing evacuation orders and warnings to nearby communities and a host of impacts as far west as the coast. State Route 299 is still closed in Trinity County with no timetable for re-opening and State Route 36 is closed from the junction at State Route 3 to Bowman Road. Air quality will continue to be impacted by smoke, with an advisory in place for communities in eastern Humboldt.

As a precautionary measure with resources already stretched, the U.S. Forest Service has temporarily closed nine National Forests, including Klamath, Mendocino, Shasta-Trinity and Six Rivers.

Here's a brief look at each of the first burning near Humboldt and what you need to know. Check www.northcoast-journal.com for regular updates.

The Fires

The Monument Fire, 152,125 acres, 20 percent contained

Located a half mile west of Big Bar along State Route 299 east of Willow Creek, the Monument Fire was sparked by lightning on July 30 and saw modest growth Aug. 23 and Aug. 24, bringing it to more than 152,000 acres. Fire crews were working to hold containment lines protecting Hawkins Bar and Trinity Village to the northwest, Hyampom to the south and Weaverville to the fire's northeast, while crews also did inspections, advising residents on how to best prepare their properties. Fire activity has fluctuated with the wind, especially along the Trinity River Basin, sometimes causing spot fires as far as a mile from the fire line amid extremely dry conditions.

According to CalFire, 50 structures had been destroyed as of Aug. 24.

The McFarland Fire, 118,624 acres, 71 percent contained

Sparked by lightning July 29 on McFarland Ridge south of State Route 36, the fire is burning in timberlands with fuels with historically low moisture levels in an area that hasn't burned in more than 50 years. Crews continued to gain a hold on the fire Aug. 23, when it grew little more than 500 acres and containment was increased from 68 percent to 71 percent, thanks in a large part to favorable conditions. As the Journal went to press, crews continued to prioritize contingency containment lines along the north side of State Route 36.

A damage assessment found 46 structures — including 24 residences — destroyed in the blaze.

River Complex 2021, 86,782 acres, 10 percent contained

Located in the Salmon/Scott River Ranger District of the Klamath National Forest, the complex consists of multiple lightning fires sparked in dry timber and brush on July 30. The full complex includes 22 fires, six of which have been fully contained. Favorable conditions Aug. 23 allowed crews to strengthen contingency lines and implement structure defense plans for fire-threatened communities.

An active burn area in the McFarland Fire, which was sparked by lightning July 29.
U.S. Forest Service

The McCash Fire: 21,732 acres, 0 percent containment

Sparked by lightning on July 31, the McCash Fire is burning near Somes Bar in the Marble Mountain Wilderness in Siskiyou County in an area of timber growth with an understory of tall grass and brush. It grew by about 2,000 acres Aug. 23 but some of that was attributed to more accurate mapping rather than fire growth.

Crews continue to work day and night to protect structures along the State Route 96 corridor, specifically in the Ti Bar and Patterson areas.

The fire threatens significant cultural sites for the Karuk Tribe, as well as some structures on private lands. The current estimated containment date is Sept. 29.

The Eureka Street Art Festival transforms 11 more city walls

news@northcoastjournal.com

The effort to enliven and beautify Eureka's public spaces took another leap forward this month, as a dozen mostly local artists took to the streets to transform placid, plain walls along the U.S. 101 corridor, imbuing them with color and meaning.

Through its first three years, the annual Eureka Street Art Festival saw more than 30 murals painted in Eureka's Old Town, Downtown and Henderson Center areas. This year, artists added 11 more along the city's main artery, which sees more than 30,000 vehicle trips a day, with a theme of "wayfinding."

The murals range from fun and whimsical to deeply meaningful, with a pair of works that offer acknowledgement to dark periods in the city's past — acknowledgement that would have seemed impossible until recently.

First, in the newly christened Chinatown Alley near Fifth and E streets, the Eureka Chinatown Project oversaw the installation of a large mural that plays the festival's theme by proclaiming the area "Historic Chinatown," while also paying homage to the city's forced expulsion of Chinese residents in 1885 under threat of mob violence. Entitled "Fowl," the mural by Oakland artist Dave Kim features a mandarin duck, a Chinese symbol of love and fidelity, over a cityscape of historic Chinatown. And in the left corner is a portrait of Ben Chin, who in 1954 moved to Eureka to open a restaurant and is believed to be the first person of Chinese descent to reside in the city since the expulsion.

A few blocks over, on an exterior wall of the Clarke Museum in Opera Alley, Yurok artist Alme Allen led a team working to restore a mural inspired by renowned Karuk elder Brian Tripp's poem, "The Sun Set Twice on the People that Day," commemorating the Wiyot massacre on Tuluwat Island in 1860. The mural, which is inspired by a poem of Tripp's by the same name, was originally installed on the side of the Eureka Theater but was removed some years a few years ago and had been in storage before Allen and a group of artists restored it at its new home for the festival.

Other installations this year include a huge map of the city at the corner of Fifth and E streets and a large abstract on the south face of the Humboldt County Courthouse. As artists worked over the course of a week to push forward the festival's goal of revitalization through beautification, local photographer Alexander Woodard was there to capture their progress and their finished products. Check out a selection of his photos here, find more online and get more information about the annual festival and participating artists at www.eurekastreetartfestival.com.

What's Good Roundup

Coffee at the Vance and lunch at the zoo

All in the Familia

When Bandit Savory & Sweet left the oak counters of the ground floor of the Vance building in Old Town Eureka, along with the sadness that has followed so many closures in the last year, I felt a twinge of guilt. While I happily shared in this paper and elsewhere how very good the hefty, sea salt-sprinkled chocolate chip cookies were, I kept them from my family. I selfishly feared these delights would replace my own homemade recipe as their favorite and so they never even got to taste the Bandit cookies. I'm a monster. A cookie monster.

Now the worker-owned Familia Coffee Roasters has moved into the spot at 525 Second St., offering pour-over coffee, espresso drinks and house specialties like a mocha made with Dick Taylor Madagascar chocolate. The Cafe Miel, a latte with cinnamon and coffee blossom honey, is warm in flavor and in the hands.

The menu board offers soft, tangy chilaquiles topped with little hunks of cloud-like spinach, jalapeño and cheese frittata, as well as creme fraiche. The Sweet and Savory toast — a thick slab of Josh Fox Bread topped with marmalade, ricotta, fragrant basil and apricot slices drizzled with that same coffee blossom honey and a little sea salt — leans sweet and is more substantial than one might think, even without the addition of prosciutto.

And there on the counter, under gleaming domes, are the Bandit cookies, along with Familia's own muffins, granola and coffee cake. Bandit owner Erica Davies works for Familia in her old spot now, baking and organizing the collaborative menu that leans on local producers like Josh Fox Bread, Shakefork Farm and Dick Taylor Chocolates.

A rosemary lemon cookie dips well in a latte — nearly as well as the chocolate chip that, now available once more, I'll be eating in blissful solitude in the driveway. What? I'm sharing the chilaquiles.

Feeding time at the Zoo

With all the excitement over the newly opened Redwood Sky Walk at the Sequoia Park Zoo (3414 W St., Eureka) and its elevated view of the big trees, it's easy to miss changes on the ground. But descend the ramp, hang left past the flamingoes and the otter habitat, and you'll come upon the newish Ecos Cafe, completed during the pandemic.

Christine Silver — owner of Sixth & E Neighborhood Eatery, Delish on 5th and Humboldt Soup Co. — has taken over the café that caters to zoo visitors under the watchful eyes of tree-lounging red pandas painted on the walls by muralist Blake Reagan. And while I have fond memories of the old cafe's grilled cheese, which already shamed the sad nuggets and flimsy burgers offered in most zoos and museum cafeterias, the menu has evolved.

The western burger, topped with a thick onion ring, cheddar cheese, lettuce, tomato, pickle and barbecue sauce on a toasted bun, is solid. So are the thick fries you might sub for the sweet potato species, which are soft and steamy inside, sprinkled with sea salt and served with a little paper cup of peanut sauce. There's a house-made chickpea and vegetable burger on offer, as well.

If you were hoping to snag a chicken finger from your kid's plate, just one might not do it. The fried chicken strips are brined overnight, dredged in butter-milk and fried for a crisp crust and juicy interior. (PSA: In this brief, often cruel life, you do not need to eat unseasoned fried chicken breast that relies on the crust to impart flavor. You just don't.) Dipping the tenders in ranch dressing at a picnic table on the covered patio post-Sky Walk should be part of your calculus when deciding whether to invest in that annual zoo membership.

Get Out into the Fog

By Simona Carini

getout@northcoastjournal.com

The bubble of fog on Big Lagoon offers the perfect balm for all of life's raised voices.

If someone had told me 20 years ago that I would come to love fog, to find solace in its soft and moist embrace, I would have dismissed the prediction.

As a young adult, for 10 years I lived in Milan, which is located in the Po River Valley, land of impenetrable fog. During the winter, for days the view outside the window would be a gray wall of nothing. Having grown up in Perugia, an airy city on top of a hill, I experienced fog as oppressive. It impeded visibility and was dangerous for pedestrians and drivers of all vehicles. Definitely not fun.

When I moved to Northern California, I met the local fog, which feels and behaves differently. For a while I had difficulty calling it fog, as it often looked like soft clouds that were not harbingers of rain but would dissipate around midday and retake the sky at sunset.

I now love fog, and not just because I know it is good for our North Coast environment and beloved redwood forests, but because it is a cozy place where silence reigns. Maybe it is just me, but I am suffering from screaming fatigue. Life has been hard enough for all of us since early March 2020: why so many raised voices?

There are two places where I particularly like to go out into the fog. First, Big Lagoon on my standup paddleboard. There is an ideal balance of fog height and density that makes an outing perfect: I like not being able to see all the way around, yet far enough so I don't feel closed in, but rather moving in a kind of cool, giant bubble — dressed in bright yellow or orange to be quite visible.

I paddle along the spit, so I can keep an eye on land for safety, and see the sand slowly slide on one side, the dead tree that's been reaching out with its bleached branches for a long time, birds flying in and out of the bubble space: when they land on the water, their soft splash the only other sound added to that of my paddle dipped rhythmically into the water. I see no trees, though I know they cover the eastern shore, hear no cars, though I know they travel on the highway skirting the lagoon.

The quiet fog-padded cocoon is a special spa treatment for my often-anxious mind, a luxury in which I indulge with deep gratitude. On the way back, as I approach the south end of the lagoon, trees slowly materialize to my left, first as shadows, then as dark shapes, finally as Sitka spruce, under which people camp, their tents and other gear splashes of color in an otherwise subdued palette. I gently push my paddleboard alongside the concrete ramp, step on land and feel ready to face the world again.

Clam Beach and Little River Beach at low tide have recently become another favorite fog spot for a walk or a run, offering an expanse of combed sand in ever-shifting shapes modeled by the tides. The vastness of the space can be disorienting and being in a fog bubble is comforting. Every now and then a person with their dog or a group of people emerge from the fog, a sudden materialization of humanity that is both startling and reassuring. They soon move outside the bubble space and disappear, their shapes never fully sharp, as the fog softens contours.

Approaching Moonstone Beach, familiar rock shapes first darken then dominate the view ahead. There are usually people there and sometimes surfers in the water, but Little River separates the two beaches and crossing the water never appeals to me, so this is the turn-around spot. Southward, fog takes over again, though if the sun is making inroads into fog's dominance, I can see a slight lightening of the grass on the dunes: nothing beyond that.

The ocean makes its presence felt, but it is tamed, as I can see only a short distance from shore, so the vast body of water is reduced to a few yards of silver ripples that slide on the dark sand dotted with sand dollars and fragments of shells. The fog tones down colors, sounds, sharp angles. As I look for the trail back to the parking lot, and ahead at the rest of the day in front of my computer, I know the fog will stay with me: I will carry its softness like a lantern to illuminate my path and my encounters with others along the way.

Anglers Await Arrival of Fall Klamath Kings

By Kenny Priest

fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Some of the best steelhead fishing in recent years on the Klamath has kept anglers busy as we await the arrival of the fall kings. There's been flurries of fish moving in the estuary and below the U.S. Highway 101 bridge, but not many are choosing to head upriver as of yet. The water temperatures cooled by a couple degrees Monday and quite a few fresh steelhead and jacks moved into the lower river. The big kings should start to move any time, especially with the water starting to cool down. According to Dan Troxel, an environmental scientist on the Klamath River Project, only 47 adult salmon had been harvested from the State Route 96 bridge at Weitchpec to the Klamath mouth towards the quota of 611 for the week ending Thursday Aug. 19. Of those, 20 adults were caught at the spit area of the mouth. As of last Friday, 163 adults remained of the 183-adult sub-quota for the mouth. If the fishing doesn't bust open soon, there is some help on the way. Reportedly, flows coming out of the Trinity are scheduled to increase Sept. 3 for the ceremonial Hoopa Boat Dance. Flows are predicted to peak at 2,800 cubic feet per second on the Hoopa gauge Sept. 5 or Sept. 6 and then ramp back down by Sept. 8.

Marine forecast

Gale force northerly gusts are forecast to develop Friday across the outer waters north of Cape Mendocino. Winds near-shore will generally be lighter. However, seas will grow steeper through the end of the week and over the weekend. Out 10 nautical miles north of the Cape, Friday's forecast is calling for north winds 15 to 25 knots and waves out of the north 9 feet at nine seconds. Saturday is calling for north winds 10 to 15 knots and waves northwest 9 feet at nine seconds. Sunday, winds will be out of the north at 5 to 15 knots and waves northwest 7 feet at eight seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com. To monitor the latest Humboldt bar conditions, visit www.wrh.noaa.gov/eka/swan. You can also call the National Weather Service at 443-7062 or the office on Woodley Island at 443-6484.

The Oceans:

Eureka

Wind and rough ocean conditions have kept the Eureka boats tied up for well over a week. There is a brief weather window for Wednesday and Thursday before the wind returns by the weekend. According to Tim Klassen, of Reel Steel Sport Fishing, the tuna water is still within reach. "The warm water is roughly 40 to 45 miles from Eureka," said Klassen. "We just need some decent weather."

Shelter Cove

The salmon bite has been pretty good this week, reports Jake Mitchell, of Sea Hawk Sport Fishing. "We had limits most days of nice quality kings up to 32 pounds," Mitchell said. "We've been getting them just south of the harbor around the bell buoy. The rock fishing was stellar as well as we limited on rockfish a few days after our salmon. The lingcod bite remains inconsistent with about a fish per rod average."

Crescent City

Windy conditions have slowed the off-shore fishing out of Crescent City. A few boats are getting out early in the morning and hitting spots close to the harbor for limits of rockfish and some lingcod. The Sisters continues to be one of the better locations. The tuna water is still sitting 30 miles straight out of Crescent City, but conditions don't look great for the remainder of the week and the weekend.

Cotati resident Brandon Crane landed a nice hatchery steelhead while fishing the Klamath River Saturday.

The Rivers:

Lower Klamath

The stellar steelhead fishing is still going strong on the lower Klamath. The river is full of half-pounders, along with lots of adults running 3 to 6 pounds. More jacks entered the river on Monday and quite a few boats were getting limits. Very few adults are being caught, but that could change at any time, especially with the water temps starting to cool. The estuary fishery isn't red-hot, but a few are being caught by boats trolling anchovies. Most of the fishing pressure has moved upriver.

Pop-Op Perfection?

Annette and Stillwater offer very different French experiences

By John J. Bennett

screens@northcoastjournal.com

ANNETTE. Received rapturously at the Cannes Film Festival — the standing ovation lasted long enough for Adam Driver to smoke a cigarette — this might fairly be interpreted as the long-overdue arrival of the Brothers Mael. That statement, of course, cannot be made, at least by me, without a few disclaimers/asterisks. First, and perhaps most obviously, Ron and Russell have, as has been widely discussed of late, been making meaningful if often overlooked pop records for half a century; not exactly lightweights. Further, Edgar Wright's charming, illuminating documentary The Sparks Brothers having so recently bowed, a great many of us (including the casually aware but largely uninitiated) are newly minted enthusiasts, both of the band and the heartwarming iconoclastic siblings who drive it. Thirdly, most cynically and perhaps unfounded, it has historically been anybody's guess what will drive French audiences wild, at Cannes or elsewhere.

It certainly helps that Annette is a collaboration of the Maels (story, songs and arrangements) and beloved French cinematic oddball Leos Carax. As with so many prominent practitioners of the form, I have long been more aware of Carax by reputation than my own familiarity with his work. He has been making features and shorts, usually to no or little renown, for nearly 40 years. His most recent feature, Holy Motors (2012), is a work of singular vision, a nighttime head-trip that could not — nor would — have been essayed by anyone else, at least with any success. Carax is a visionary, an adept technician, a cynic and a celebrant of the absurd; trés Français.

And collaborating with an L.A. band more European than most Continentals, he has made a very French, very American, very strange movie musical about sex and death and art and celebrity that marries his brand of magical realism with the tragicomic absurdist maximalist pop of Sparks. For what it is, what it sets out to accomplish, I suspect Annette is perfect. I may not ever watch it again and a great many viewers might not get through it a first time, but it is a formidable and singular creation; undeniably a work of art.

Henry McHenry (Driver), a confrontationalist stand-up comedian with a motorcycle, an outsized persona and tremendous fame, falls in love with otherworldly opera singer Ann Defrasnoux (Marion Cotillard). The affair is tempestuous and passionate, troubled by his rage and alcoholism, as well as the protected flame of her own insecurity. Thrust into the public eye, their personal life deteriorates, even as they conceive a magical child called Annette (a proto-Simian marionette with an ethereal singing voice from birth). The proximity of Ann's nameless accompanist (Simon Helberg), as well as suggested questions of Annette's parentage, strain the couple past the breaking point.

I'll stand by my past, bratty comments about both opera and the bastardized musical theater version thereof. I am probably not refined enough to really appreciate the artistry of the former, but I think watching or listening to it in a foreign tongue ameliorates the effect of the latter, where we are forced to hear contractions and awkward rhymes forced into song structure in order to convey story. And so Annette presents an interesting conundrum: It is every bit a musical, maybe even an opera, with the number of spoken lines countable on two hands. It works as well as it does, though, because it hues so closely to the underpinnings of Sparks songcraft. The Maels have always told stories with songs, often in unadorned, conversational language. And often as not, those stories are set against grand, often orchestral arrangements to punctuate both the detachment and genuine emotion thereof. Annette could be taken as their most audacious concept album, with the band receding into the background as Driver, Cotillard, Helberg and the occasional chorus of strangers present their pared-down, repetitive, mesmeric lyrics.

Carax, with cinematographer Caroline Champetier, editor Nelly Quettier and production designer Florian Sanson, create an utterly immersive atmosphere within which the narrative can move and breathe; even the stagier passages have a feeling of limitlessness and invention, an unbound- edness only possible in cinema but in perfect keeping with the Maels' aesthetic. STILLWATER. I haven't left myself much room for this, a smaller but equally meritorious movie with similar themes of devotion and loss. Directed by Tom McCarthy, who co-wrote the screenplay with Marcus Hinchey, Thomas Bidegain and Noé Debré, the story centers on Bill Baker (Matt Damon), an Oklahoma roughneck between rig jobs, whose daughter Allison (Abigail Breslin) has been in prison in Marseilles for five years, convicted of the murder of her girlfriend. Allison maintains her innocence and Bill, in a misplaced act of loyalty and amends, works to exonerate her.

Very much out of place, unable to speak a word of French despite his many visits, Bill eventually befriends Virginie (Camille Cottin) and her young daughter Maya (Lilou Siauvaud). Virginie agrees to help Bill with his investigation, which almost immediately goes disastrously awry.

The story is foregrounded by a meditation on our cultural differences, xenophobia at home and abroad (from both the American and French perspectives) and the banality of guilt and the eternal struggle for forgiveness. It is exceedingly textured and compelling, consummately nuanced. R. 140M. MINOR THEATRE. ●

NCJ FIELD NOTES

When the Old World Met the New

By Barry Evans

16th century Aztec drawing of smallpox victims.
Public domain, via Wikipedia

Imagine this: Of 19 friends, 18 of them die within a few weeks. Horribly, painfully. You and one other friend are the only survivors, one in 10. That's the extent of the death toll in the Americas, mostly by infectious diseases, starting in 1493. At that time, the population of the New World was probably around 60 million (estimates vary wildly); 150 years later, it was 6 million. The extent of the die-off is hard to comprehend, especially because we have so few written records of the devastation.

Columbus' second trans-Atlantic voyage in 1493 was far different from his first. No longer the explorer, he was now a full-fledged slave trader, colonizer and Christian evangelist. His fleet of 17 ships carried 1,500 men — mostly soldiers — together with livestock: horses (returning to the Americas after a hiatus of 10,000 years), dogs, chickens, cattle and pigs. Accompanying the humans and animals were invisible pathogens that would be deadly to Native Americas, but to which citizens of Europe, Africa and Asia had long developed immunity: typhus, dysentery, malaria, TB, measles. And, deadliest of all, smallpox.

This viral disease was eliminated in the 1970s in one of medicine's greatest successes, having killed close to half a billion people in the previous 100 years. According to author and explorer Douglas Preston, in his best seller The Lost City of the Monkey God, it is "the cruelest disease ever to afflict the human race." Although Preston's particular interest is the abrupt disappearance, in the early 1500s, of a civilization that had flourished for centuries in eastern Honduras, it's a much larger story. In the Americas as a whole, where the native population had never been exposed to smallpox, the disease was responsible for more deaths than anything else, including massacres and slavery.

Death from smallpox is excruciating. According to 16th century Seville historian Francisco de Gomara, who interviewed returning New World travelers, smallpox was "a dreadful illness. No one could walk; they could only lie stretched out on their beds ... when they moved, they screamed in pain. ... Many died from it, but many died only of hunger ... for they had no one left to care for them." No wonder Herman Cortés was able to defeat the 6-million-strong Aztec empire with 500 soldiers; as one of Cortés' companions, Francisco de Aguilar, wrote approvingly, "When the Christians were exhausted from war, God saw fit to send the Indians smallpox." (He later became a Dominican monk, perhaps as atonement.)

So how was it that Old World residents — Asians, Africans and Europeans — had immunity while people living in the Americas didn't? In his bestseller Guns, Germs and Steel, anthropologist Jared Diamond suggests the one-word answer, livestock. In the Old World, domesticated livestock — in particular, cattle, pigs, chickens, sheep and goats — were central to virtually every household, meaning people lived right next to pathogen-carrying animals. When these pathogens mutated to human hosts (e.g. cowpox to smallpox, rinderpest to measles, etc.) the death toll would have been horrific. However, some survived by developing immunity which they passed on to their children, leaving a mostly immune population.

In the Americas, with fewer domesticated animals (mainly llamas and guinea pigs), and more space (New World cities were generally smaller than those in the Old World), civilization evolved without coming into contact with these diseases. So when they did, mostly between 1493 and 1640, those diseases killed some 90 percent of the population. In Preston's words, "The New World was like a vast, tinder-dry forest waiting to burn — and Columbus brought the fire." ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) considers the first vaccine, Edward Jenner's 1796 smallpox vaccine (derived from cowpox), one of the greatest achievements in medicine.
